What you shared helps me now with my blogging and made me realize a book may actually be a possibility for me, and sooner than I'd previously thought.

She used character and story to represent a lot of data in an easy to follow way.

Great class! I loved it and will listen again.

Shawndra considers herself a lousy tourist as she usually spends her vacations enjoying a good book (reading one or writing one) and drinking coffee on her lanai, deck, porch or sunroom. That's why she prefers to live and work in interesting locales. She went to graduate school in Montana, worked on Johnston Island (~850 southwest of Hawai'i) for several years, spent a year at the South Pole, Antarctica, and then thawed out in Hawaii. She is currently enjoying the people and scenery of Western Pennsylvania as she organizes and coaches writers and others who are reaching for their dreams.
